

Mission 21 Summer School 2021

“Racism and the mission history of the Basel Mission/Presbyterian Church in Cameroon”.

By Rev. Felix Kang Esoh (PhD)

(World Christianity and Mission Studies @ Presbyterian Theological Seminary, Kumba)

INTRODUCTION

- ▶ Besides the phenomenon of the Trans–Atlantic slave trade, the colonial enterprise and the Christian missionary enterprise together constitute the two most important events that have positively or negatively shaped contemporary Africa (Njoku 2005).
 - ▶ While the former focused on the economic and political dimensions, the later impacted heavily on the religious and cultural landscape of Africa and considerably tinkered with its dominant worldview and value system.
-

INTRODUCTION

- ▶ This presentation critically examines the impact of the colonial enterprise on the missionary enterprise in Cameroon, and to highlight how it has continued to influence Mission(s) in contemporary Cameroon.
- ▶ May be in order to appreciate the way missions has been done since the 19th century, it is crucial to examine the why, the how and the consequences of the methods employed by the early European Missionaries.
- ▶ Our method is distinctly thematic rather than detailed, aiming to representatively highlight the key racist tendencies that characterised the introduction of missionary (Basel Mission) activities in the Cameroons.

Cultural background to the missionary enterprise

- ▶ The following quote by David Bosch situates the European worldview at the time:

“The entire Western missionary movement of the past three centuries emerged from the matrix of the Enlightenment. On the one hand, it spawned an attitude of tolerance to all people and a relativistic attitude toward belief of any kind; on the other hand, it gave birth to western superiority feelings and prejudice....” (Bosch 1991).

Cultural background to the missionary enterprise

- ▶ Culturally, the age of enlightenment led Europe to translate its civilisation into an unmatched cultural arrogance and superiority. The spirit of cultural superiority ran deep and high in the mentality of the West (Fanon 1967). Njoku notes that it is with this spirit of cultural pride that Europe went into colonialism with the missionaries fully embracing the idea of a “civilising Mission” (Njoku 2013: 228).
- ▶ For instance, on the relationship between Christianity and the Cameroonian culture, Oehler said; “a Christian mission cannot avoid being an agent of higher culture among ‘cultureless’ or ‘poor cultured peoples’”. The idea of “cultureless” or “poor cultured people” confirmed the general European view about the so-called pagan world (see Edinburg 1910).
- ▶ Built on the structures of racism, the German colonial administration’s policy of Herensvolk (“master race theory”) greatly influenced the Basel mission’s strategies and methods in the Cameroonian mission field.

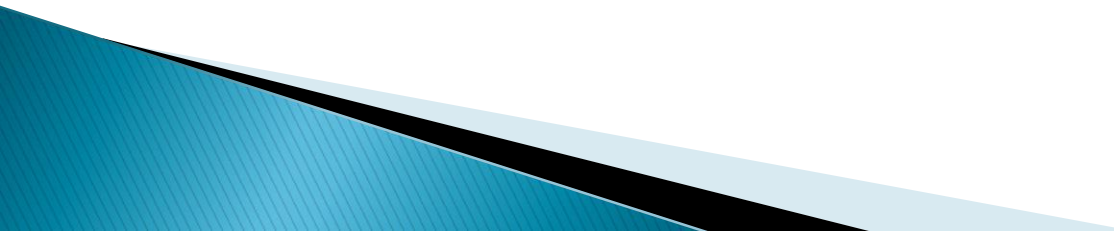

Missionary motivation

- ▶ The goals and strategies of the Basel Mission at the time were developed by Theodor Oehler , the then Inspector of the Basel Mission (Dah 1983): amongst others, they included,

Missionary motivation

- ▶ To plant evangelical Christianity among the heathens;
- ▶ To control the religious and moral life of the people through the introduction of a Christian church order and education;
- ▶ To emphasise Western Christianity as the standard for knowledge, social position and economic strength
- ▶ To articulate Western civilisation as a blessing from God for the spreading of the gospel, based on the idea of “manifest Destiny”. (Dah 1983).

Missionary method

- ▶ Amongst the methods employed by the Basel Mission for evangelism, including education, health care, infrastructural development, the idea of “villagisation” was the method that overtly extended the ideology of “racism”.
 - ▶ The creation of “Christian Villages” enforced the binary categorisation of Europe as superior over the inferior blacks.
 - ▶ By the same racist undertone, Christian villages separated African converts from their ‘so-called’ pagan environments.
-

Missionary method

- ▶ While the Missionaries lived in the Mission Stations, those in the “Christian Villages” lived a little distant from them, separated from the village, thereby creating a new configuration of superiority: whites
 - superior blacks (who eventually became the middle class or elites)
 - pagan or inferior blacks.

The failed attempt at villagisation

Dah advances two reasons for the failure of this approach:

- ▶ Firstly, other whites challenged the idea for according to them; it brought natives in contact with the “superior races” and may facilitate a better and more civilised life for the natives.
- ▶ Secondly, the natives were disinterested in the idea of Christian Villages because they saw it as a re-invention of the “slave Quarters” usually situated at the entrances of the Master Villages during the days of slave trade.
- ▶ While the New Testament demands a spiritual separation, the missionaries emphasised a physical separation from the pagan environments.
- ▶ Their failure to understand the traditional environment of the people which was based on group identity and solidarity, resulted in the following:

Consequences of the missionary method:

- ▶ Raciality took the shape of ethnicity; some major tribes, tried to subjugate others with the complicity of the missionaries;
- ▶ The idea of Christian villages led to the creation of an elite middle class who would become missionary/colonial band-boys/girls;
- ▶ There is ethnic division and break down in communality due to the spirit of denominationalism;
- ▶ Native suspicion of missions as accomplices to the social, economic, cultural, religious and political stagnation;
- ▶ There is continuous social and economic inequality in the status and remuneration of locals as opposed to foreign expatriates, no matter the qualification of the locals (the case of the PTS has been glaring).
- ▶ Although gender roles are gradually changing for the better, early missionary perspectives relegated women to home duties.

Conclusion: Mission as reconciliation

- ▶ Despite the racist tendencies that characterised missions during the 18th, 19th and 20th centuries, especially from the perspective of colonialism and “cultural Imperialism” (Porter 1997), one can still borrow from David Bosch to say that:

“The Western missionary enterprise of the late eighteenth to the twentieth century remained; in spite of the valid criticism which may be aimed at it... they brought the gospel as they understood it. For this we owe them respect and gratitude” (Bosch 1991: 244).

Conclusion: Mission as reconciliation

- ▶ Mission as reconciliation suggests a turn towards the modification of individualism through its encounter with other realities in a cross-cultural manner, so that social relatedness can take centre stage over individualism.
- ▶ This introduces the idea of “interdependency”, what Bosch calls “the ecumenical paradigm”, with religion transcending ethnic, national, and cultural barriers” (Sanneh 2003: 7).
- ▶ The challenges of globalisation demand a combination of forces, whereby poverty; wars; ecological crisis and a lot more contemporary issues need more than a single perspective of mission.

Conclusion: Mission as reconciliation

Permit me remind us of the following statement made during the World Council of Churches' Uppsala Assembly of 1968 on the theme: "Behold I make all things new":

"All men have become neighbours to one another. Torn by our diversities and tensions, we do not yet know how to live together. But God makes new. Christ wants his church to foreshadow a renewed human community. Therefore, we Christians will manifest our unity in Christ by entering into full fellowship with those of other races, classes, age, religious and political convictions, in the place where we live. Especially we shall seek to overcome racism wherever it appears".

- ▶ The extent to which we have done missions in relation to this statement 33 years Uppsala is among the questions we should attempt to answer during this summer school.

References

- ▶ Andrew Porter, “Cultural Imperialism” and Protestant Missionary Enterprise, 1780–1914, published in the Journal of Imperial and Commonwealth History, vol. XXV, No. 3, September 1997, pp. 367–391.
- ▶ Chukwudi A. Njoku, “The Missionary Factor in African Christianity, 1884–1914,” digitised document of the University of Pretoria Library Service, assessed 15/6/2017, http://repository.up.ac.za/bitstream/handle/2263/21579/010_Chapter9_p218-257.2013.
- ▶ David J. Bosch, Transforming Mission: Paradigm Shifts in Theology of Missions. Maryknoll, NY: Orbis Books, 1991.
- ▶ Frantz Fanon, Black Skin, White Masks, trans. by Charles Lam Markmann. New York: Grove Press Inc., 1967.
- ▶ _____ The Wretched of the Earth, translated from French by Richard Philcox (New York: Grove Press, 1969).
- ▶ Jonas N. Dah, Missionary Motivations and Methods: A Critical Examination of the Basel Mission in Cameroon 1886–1914. Basel: University of Basel, 1983.
- ▶ Victor Julius Ngoh, History of Cameroon since 1800. Limbe: Presprint. 1996.
- ▶ Werner Keller, j. Schnellbach and R. Brutsch, The History of the Presbyterian Church in West Cameroon. Victoria: Presbook Printing Press, 1969.
- ▶ World Council of Council, Uppsala 1968, WCC Archives inventory – Online search. Assesses on 21/06/2017, <http://archives.wcc-coe.org/Query/detail.aspx?ID=84798>.

Thanks for your kind attention

Rev. Dr. Felix Kang Esoh

